FAMILIES IN THE UNITED STATES BY TYPE AND SIZE: 1930

This is the first in a series of releases of previously unpublished data from the 1930 Census of Population, which show families in the United States classified by type on the basis of the sex and marital condition of the family head and the number of children under 21 years of age in the family. The tabulation was limited to white and Negro private families with known marital condition of the head; this represented 98.6 percent of all private families. Hotels, lodging houses, institutions, and other quasi families were omitted from the tabulation. A family was defined as a group of persons related by blood, marriage, or adoption, and living together as one household. The data are being made public at this time for one reason, in order to provide a tangible basis for the consideration of the questions as to what tabulations of families classified by type would be most profitably made from the 1940 census returns.

Families comprising each number of persons from one to eight or more are presented in Table 1 according to the sex and marital condition of the family head, for the United States as a whole.

Nearly one-third (31.3 percent) of the families in 1930 consisted of one or two persons. There was a sharp contrast between the size of families with a woman head and the size of families with a man head. Only 4.4 percent of the families with a man head were one-person families, as compared with 31.5 percent of the families with a woman head. However, 32.5 percent of the families with a man head included five or more persons, as compared with only 14.7 percent of the families with a woman head. Most of the large families were in the class that will be referred to as normal families, that is, families with husband and wife present. Small families were found most often among families whose heads were single and among families with man heads who were separated (married, wife not present) or divorced; over one-half of the heads in each of these classes did not have any related persons living with them.

317.3 - Un33 . suppl.

The percentage of persons of each marital condition who assumed the responsibility of heading a family can be estimated by making comparisons between Table 1 of this release and Table 5 of Chapter 11 in Volume II of the 1930 Reports on Population. The figures in Table 5 were adjusted to omit persons living in quasi families. Briefly, the results show that nearly 95 percent of the married men were heads of families; also about 55 percent of the widowed persons, 40 percent of the divorced persons, and 7 percent of the single persons 15 years old or over were heads of families. From these figures it may be inferred that 45 percent of the widowed persons and 60 percent of the divorced persons were living with other persons who were family heads.

In order to summarize conveniently the comparative sizes of families in various areas and population classes, median sizes of families are presented in Tables 2 to 5. For obvious reasons, the median size of family would not be useful for this purpose if it were to represent only the whole number of persons in that family which stands at the mid-point of the series of families arranged according to size. Consequently, a more useful summary figure is given here, namely, the whole number of persons with a fraction or decimal, which must be interpreted in an abstract or theoretical sense.

Table 2 shows the median size of family for each type of family, that is, for families by number of minors as well as by sex and marital condition of the family head. The median size of family in 1930 was 3.40 related persons. (In addition, 9.8 percent of the households contained 9224 one or more unrelated lodgers and 1.8 percent contained servants but no lodgers.) Families with a man head were over 60 percent larger than families with a woman head (3.56 compared with 2.22). The most frequently occurring families, the normal families, were more than 40 percent larger than the second largest kind of families, namely, those with a separated woman as head (3.72 compared with 2.63). Normal families with three or more minor children had a median size of 6.24 related persons. Of all types of families with a man head, the divorced men with no minor children had the smallest families (1.12); likewise, of all types of families with a woman head, the divorced women with no minor children had the smallest families (1.23). In comparing median sizes of family by number of children under 21, families with a widowed person as head were larger than any other kind of broken family; next in order were families whose heads were separated, and finally, families whose heads were divorced. Although most of the families with a single person as head consisted of few related persons, their living quarters were shared more frequently than the average by unrelated persons (partners or lodgers), according to data not presented in this release.

Differences between the median sizes of families in the geographic regions of the United States are given in Table 3.

* The North includes the New England, Middle Atlantic, and East and West North Central States; the South includes the South Atlantic and East and West South Central States; the West includes the Mountain and Pacific States.

Southern families had distinctly the largest median size (3.67 related persons). Intermediate were the Northern families (3.37) and clearly the smallest were the Western families (2.92). The same order existed for nearly every kind of family. That large Negro families were not accountable for the high median size of family in the South (South Atlantic and East and West South Central States) may be inferred from Tables 3 and 5. Perhaps the high fertility of the predominantly rural population of the South is a better explanation. The small size of the average family in the West (Mountain and Pacific States) was associated with the fact that a relatively low percentage of the families were in the category of normal families (the families that are usually the largest), and relatively high percentages of the families were headed by separated, divorced, or single persons (the families that are usually the smallest). With the exception of normal families, there were only slight differences between the median sizes of the different kinds of Northern and Southern families with a man head; however, Northern families with a woman head were much smaller than Southern families with a woman head (2.17 compared with 2.51). This finding suggests that relatively more widowed and divorced men with dependent children remarry in the South than in the North. A supplementary analysis of families by region indicates that, for families with each number of children under 21, the median size of family was smallest in the West; families with few children under 21 were smaller (that is, had fewer related persons other than the parents and minors) in the South than in the North, whereas families with three or more children were larger in the South than in the North. These facts probably reflect the higher fertility rates in the South and regional differences in the practice of sharing the home with kinsfolk.

The rural-farm families differed somewhat from the nonfarm families in size, as Table 4 indicates. The median size of rural-farm families (4.01 related persons) was considerably larger than that of rural-nonfarm (3.27) or urban families (3.26). For each kind of family, the rural-farm families were the largest. Normal families and the families of separated or divorced women in rural-nonfarm areas were slightly larger than corresponding urban families, but for the other kinds of families the reverse was true. Rather small differences in family size between rural and urban places were found in families with a separated or divorced man head and in those with a single man or woman head; these families were small, on the average, regardless of the location. In general, there was less difference between the median size of families with a man head and of families with a woman head in rural-farm areas than there was in either urban or rural-nonfarm areas.

The color-nativity groups, shown in Table 5, varied considerably from one another in median size of family.

To many people it is surprising that Negro families in 1930 were smaller than either native white or foreign-born white families (3.15 compared with 3.35 and 3.74, respectively). The high Negro birth rate was more than offset by the high Negro death rate and the relatively high incidence of broken families among Negroes. Broken families constituted 24.2 percent of the Negro families, in contrast to only 14.6 percent of the white families. Foreign-born white heads maintained the largest families of any color-nativity group in those five kinds of families that tended to be largest in size and numerically most frequent, that is, normal families, families of widowers and widows, and families with a separated or divorced woman as head. The families with a Negro woman as head were somewhat larger than the families with a native white woman as head (2.33 compared with 2.12), while the reverse was true for the families with a man head (3.33 compared with 3.49); the determining factors were the comparatively small families of Negro widowers (1.65) and the comparatively large families of the Negro widows (2.49). Supplementary information on Negro families in the three geographical regions shows that Negroes in the South had the largest families, those in the North ranked second, and those in the West third. The same sequence of regions held true for the native whites, but for the foreign-born whites the North ranked first, the South second, and the West third. The relatively large native white and Negro families in the South may be accounted for in part by the high birth rate of the Southern rural families. Also, as pointed out in connection with Table 3, small families in the West were probably attributable in part to the greater prevalence of broken families and families with single heads in that region.

Foreign-born white and Negro families differed strikingly from the native white families in terms of the number of "relatives" (that is, related persons other than the head, his wife, if any, and minor children) who were residents in the home, according to a study of more detailed tables than those shown here. In general, the foreign-born whites more often had "relatives," and the Negroes less often, than the native whites. However, for each kind of family, comparatively more Negro families with 2 minor children, than Negro families with no minor children, had "relatives" residing in their homes. These tendencies cannot be explained simply on the basis of the fact that the foreign population was largely concentrated in cities and the Negroes were the most completely rural color-nativity group. On the contrary, urban families included "relatives" in a smaller percentage of the cases than did farm families. Furthermore, in urban places families with a foreign-born white head had "relatives" in the home more often, and the Negro families less often, proportionally, than the native white families did. Perhaps having "relatives" in the home, particularly in homes with minor children, is closely associated with an older average age at marriage.

* Relatives other than the husband, his wife, and related children under 21.

In Table 6 a distribution of normal families by number of children under 21 is presented according to the number of "relatives" living in the home, other than the parents and minors. The entries in Table 6 were derived from Table 7. The distribution necessarily omits families with four or more children because the indefinite number of children makes it impossible to determine the number of "relatives" included among the persons residing in those homes. About three-fourths of the normal families contained no "relatives." Slightly over 15 percent included one "relative," about 6 percent included two "relatives," and about 2.5 percent included three or more "relatives." The variations according to the number of minor children in the family were surprisingly small. Perhaps a majority of the "relatives" were sons or daughters who were 21 years of age or over, but who had not yet established their own homes. Similar distributions for other types of families can readily be derived from the basic tables which follow, as a comparison of the entries in Table 6 with those in Table 7 will indicate.
